I think my Note Editor and Audio Recorder does a much better job than this.

You can't mark where your verse, chorus, bridge, etc. begins, you can't select text or a line to delete it by double or triple clicking, you can't hear the chords you are placing, you can't use more complicated chords, you don't have a proper help file...

Otherwise, it's just a bare bones product. Not until a few more patches later, if they do, I will return to change my review.. The app seemed promising and it definitely has some good elements, however my 3 hours of using it showed some lacks that made me decide to not use it anymore. I am happy it was cheap, otherwise I would have been furious...

So the deal breakers:

1. No undo. I wanted to delete a chord, but accidently had my entire text marked, so it all got deleted, I pushed ctrl+z and nothing happened. I looked for an undo button somewhere, but it didn't exist and I realized all my work was gone forever. Really upsetting. This is why I decided to not use it ever again, as that is a complete waste of the time I spend on it.
2. I play the ukulele, so my songs are pretty fast - still the settings will not allow me to turn down the speed of the text enough to be able to keep up, when using that function. No point in having a function if its useless.
3. No export option. Why bother writing it in this program, if I still have to write it in another one, to print or share it?
4. Only the most common chords are available, the rest I suppose would have to go in as text, but then I would prefer doing the whole thing in Word... Very sad because I really liked being able to move the chords around easily.

Other than that I have two suggestions.

1. Instead of spending 50% of the screen on the book skin, give the user sufficient room to work on. Usability over looks.
2. Change the bar where the user picks up the chords - it is a pain having to scroll back and forward. Maybe allow the user to mark the ones they need for the song and make just those available, in a way that doesn't require any scrolling.
